Jesler The Jester

"Were you ever a court jester for Robert Blanchemain, Earl of Leicester?" was what my youngest son asked me the other day. We were out doing some falconing when he smiled at me and then uttered those words. So the time has come to tell the true story about a period of my youth — when there was more hair on my head — and when I was slender and agile. Don't you dare pass any remark about how I have gained weight! Just remember who I am!

They say it is a bad thing to listen to rumors. For everybody should know how a rumor grows. It starts as a simple little statement. One person tells it to another with, or course, a few original additions. By the time the last person hears it, there is practically no connection between the first statement and what hit his ears.

So it was on that fateful day in the year 1168 when the Earl of Leicester heard that rumor from the lips of one, William de Braisoe.

"Mind you," remarked this excuse for the knight, "We know that it is a terrible thing to repeat. But these words were spoken. I have it on high authority. Lord Relsej said that your sister, Genevie, was not the prettiest female in the entire kingdom. In fact, he said that when he did get married, his bride would have to be the prettiest female that ever trod the earth of this kingdom."

The Earl of Leicester could control his army. He could control his subjects. He could control his territory. But he could not control his temper. At once he flew into a terrible rage.

"This insult to the honor and dignity of my beloved sister must be avenged," he shouted. "Summon my council of state at once. We shall declare war and on the battlefield this terrible insult will be wiped out."

I had a feeling that this sneaky William de Braisoe wanted to stir up some fighting. The council was summoned and they discussed the matter in great detail.

"They say that Lord Relsey is a direct decendant of Merlin the Magician," pointed out Odo of Benniworth. "If so, then he would surely be able to employ some of those famous magic tricks on the battlefield. Like number 12, in which a cloud comes down and envelopes the attacking army. They can't even see with whom they are fighting. So they end up by fighting among themselves. Or he might use number 67. That's the one that Merlin the Magician often used with great success. Suddenly the swords in the hands of the soldiers start to get smaller and smaller. Finally they become just one inch in length. Thus they have to surrender."

"That is a danger with which we must reckon," interrupted Knight Holles. "They say that Lord Relsey knows a lot of different ways of fighting. He spent three years in the Orient. He took his name Relsey from that of the famous General of three centuries ago who almost conquered half of the world."

"I don't care whether this is true or not," exclaimed the Earl of Leicester. "We go to war and fight. Are you scared?"

"What, ME scared?" asked Knight Holles as he started to tremble.

"I'm afraid of nothing. Just give me the command and I will go out and capture Lord Relsej all by myself."

"I give the command, now do just what you promised," grinned the Earl of Leicester. "This way we save a lot of soldiers from being wounded or killed."

So out went the Knight Holles to do just what he promised. Of course he needed some witnesses. So with him went three hundred soldiers. He was planning an ambush. He figured out that on a nice day Lord Relsej would go falconing or hunting. And he was right. One of his soldiers spotted the nobleman and gave the sign.

"We just chase him right up to the Terrible Cliff and he will have to surrender," announced Knight Holles.

Which is exactly what they did. It was a chase of ten miles. The true and faithful horse of Lord Relsej did his best. And when the pursuers came they saw a sad sight. The horse was standing at the edge of the cliff weeping.

"This is loyalty," commented one of the soldiers. "I dare not even look over the Terrible Cliff. They saw it goes straight down for about five miles. Gets you dizzy just to think about it."

Then they spotted me near a group of trees. I was dressed in a simple leather suit.

"At least we have one prisoner," laughed Knight Holles. "And Lord Relsej is no more. Down at the bottom of that cliff."

I offered no resistance and one of the soldiers gave me a lift on his horse. They took me to the castle and brought me before the Earl of Leicester.

"What do you do, you low-born peasant?" demanded the noble.

I didn't like that tone of voice. What did I do? I had to think quickly.

"I make jokes," was my reply.

"Tell me a joke or a riddle and I will then judge as to your qualifications," he answered.

"Why does a chicken want to cross the road to the other side?" was what I told him.

He thought and thought. So did everybody there in the large room of the castle. Then I spotted her. The sister of the Earl. She was Genevie. Certainly a good looker.

"Why?" she asked.

"To get to the other side of the road," I smiled.

Everybody watched her reaction. She laughed — so then they all laughed. Right there and then I got my appointment as jester. What was my name? Jesler I told them so I became Jesler the Jester. It was tough work. Trying to remember old jokes. Everytime the Earl gave a party I had to tell some jokes.

One day the fair Lady Genevie summoned me. She was seated in the large library room of the castle. She handed me a sheet of paper.

"My eyes are tired and the writing is too small," she explained. "Please read it to me."

I fell for that! Guess my mind wasn't alert. I was noticing her two blue eyes.

"Ego Wilhelmus de Roumara uolens scire uerita tem de prebenda Asgerbie inquisui eam a melioribus . . ." and she stopped me with a big smile all over her face.

"You read Latin so I assume you can translate it. Just what is your game here?"

"Don't ask too many questions," I pleaded. "But your life and that of your brother may be in danger. Williams de Braisoe is planning a big double cross. You will see it tonight at the big banquet. Duke Benniworth is guest of honor. He wants to take over the castle, get all the territory, and will insist you marry him."

"Never," she insisted. "My heart is yours. I know not who you be. But something inside of me tells me you are of noble birth and one to be trusted."

So that's how she go into my arms and we kissed each other. We heard a slight cough as Herbert the page boy entered the library room. He made one comment.

"Gee, isn't love wonderful!"

There was much festivity that night. Outside of the castle were the soldiers of Duke Benniworth. At a signal the drawbridge was lowered. They marched right into the banquet hall.

"You are all my prisoners," announced that treacherous man who should never have been a noble man in the first place.

The fair Lady Genevie ran right to my side and held my hand.

"Protect us," she half pleaded.

The time had come to reveal my true identity to all present.

"I am Lord Relsej," I said simply.

"So what?" challenged Duke Benniworth.

Quickly I took out the weapon I had concealed underneath my leather jacket. My finger was on the trigger.

"You all know that they say I am a descendant of Merlin the Magician. What I hold in my hand is a sub-machine gun. It won't be invented until many centuries have passed. Want a demonstration of what it can do? Especially since this one uses armor-piercing bullets."

We might as well skip the details of what happened in the next three minutes. Suffice it to say that Evil was punished and everybody was happy. The Earl was quick when it came to thinking.

"You did say that your bride would have to be the prettiest female that ever trod the earth of this kingdom."

So we were married and were happy forever and ever.

"But pop," my youngest son wanted to know. "Even I can read backwards and figure out what Jesler means. Surely, mother must have known who you were right from the start."

Coming to think about it — I never thought of that angle before!

Dear Freddy:

I am in the 4th grade and go to Lafayette School which I think is just grand.

Once, while reading "My Little Margie" comics I saw an advertisement of "Freddy" comics. I quickly went to the store and it was a good thing I went just then because there was only one left. When I read it I laughed so much I almost fell off my chair.

Terri F. Cohen
102 Maffet St.
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

DEAR TERRI,
PLEASE, NOT SO LOUD! IF EVERYONE KNEW THAT FREDDY COMICS IS SO FUNNY IT KNOCKS YOU OFF YOUR CHAIR, I DON'T THINK THEY'D BUY MY COMICS... AFTER ALL, NOBODY LIKES TO BE KNOCKED OFF HIS CHAIR!

ALL KIDDING ASIDE, WAIT TILL YOU READ FUTURE ISSUES OF FREDDY, YOU'LL LAUGH SO HARD AND IF YOU DO FALL OFF YOUR CHAIR FROM LAUGHING, YOU'LL FEEL NO PAIN!

LOTS OF LUCK,
Freddy

Dear Freddy:

I like your comics very much and read them all the time. I go to "Our Lady of Victory School" and am in the 5th grade. I'm a Girl Scout in Troop 147. I would like to be in your fan club and be one of your girl friends.
